and the United Kingdom, have led to a fundamental questioning of goals and strategies of urban planning. Content is back, just as is thinking about integrative and coordinated action. But what orientations can we discern, and what strategies could realistically be expected to be most effective in dealing with the urban conflicts that manifest themselves? Moreover, what effects do the different strategies themselves have on the respective conflicts? In his lecture, Maarten Hajer will plea for a public domain strategy to deal with the newly emerged urban conflicts. Drawing on Chantal Mouffe’s notion of democracy as articulation of conflict, he defines several components of such a new public domain strategy drawing on material gathered through the detailed analysis of several recent urban conflicts in Dutch cities.

He is a trained political scientist and urban planner and is the author of several books including The Politics of Environmental Disclosure (Oxford 1995) and In Search of New Public Domain (Nai Publishers 2000, with Arnold Reijndorp). In 2005, he set up the interdisciplinary Amsterdam Centre for Conflict Studies.

The sudden outbreaks of violence in the streets in Paris and other French cities in 2004, the murder of filmmaker Van Gogh in Amsterdam and the reports of a deteriorating relationship with the Muslim population coming from a variety of countries including Germany and the United Kingdom, have led to a fundamental questioning of goals and strategies of urban planning. Content is back, just as is thinking about integrative and coordinated action. But what orientations can we discern, and what strategies could realistically be expected to be most effective in dealing with the urban conflicts that manifest themselves? Moreover, what effects do the different strategies themselves have on the respective conflicts? In his lecture, Maarten Hajer will plea for a public domain strategy to deal with the newly emerged urban conflicts. Drawing on Chantal Mouffe’s notion of democracy as articulation of conflict, he defines several components of such a new public domain strategy drawing on material gathered through the detailed analysis of several recent urban conflicts in Dutch cities.

He is a trained political scientist and urban planner and is the author of several books including The Politics of Environmental Disclosure (Oxford 1995) and In Search of New Public Domain (Nai Publishers 2000, with Arnold Reijndorp). In 2005, he set up the interdisciplinary Amsterdam Centre for Conflict Studies.